

COMPTRASEC, the Centre for comparative labour and social security law, CNRS joint research unit 5114 - is organizing an international multi-disciplinary conference to mark the 70th anniversary of Social Security.

This is an opportunity to look into the social security systems and models existing in various regions of the world, in a context very different from that which was in place at the time these systems were born in Europe: a context of economic globalization, economic informalization, and the emergence of new social risks and new forms of work, the transformation of family models, and the growth of community solidarity, casualization of work, income and resources, women's role in contemporary societies, etc. These factors and transformations require an examination of the universality and modernity of the idea of social security, based on a critical, multidisciplinary and comparative analysis of its implementation and its transformations in different economic, political and social systems.
